

Georgia Southern University Digital Commons@Georgia Southern

Education, College of - News

Education, College of- Publications

College of Education News

October 3, 2017

Georgia Southern University

Follow this and additional works at: <https://digitalcommons.georgiasouthern.edu/coe-news>

Part of the Higher Education Commons

Recommended Citation

Georgia Southern University, "College of Education News" (2017). Education, College of - News. 199.
<https://digitalcommons.georgiasouthern.edu/coe-news/199>

This article is brought to you for free and open access by the Education, College of- Publications at Digital Commons@Georgia Southern. It has been accepted for inclusion in Education, College of - News by an authorized administrator of Digital Commons@Georgia Southern. For more information, please contact digitalcommons@georgiasouthern.edu.

Chamblee completes six-year term on GaPSC review board

October 3, 2017

Gregory Chamblee, Ph.D.

Greg Chamblee, Ph.D., professor in the Department of Teaching and Learning, completed a six-year term on the Georgia Professional Standards Commission (GaPSC) Evaluation Review Board (ERB) at the end of August. Members of the Evaluation Review Panel review Site Visitor Reports and Progress Reports as a result of Areas for Improvement or Stipulations cited during an approval review. The ERP members make critical approval recommendations to members of the Commission. The recommendations of the Panel are a major consideration in approval decisions made by Commissioners. ERP members are all trained GaPSC Site Visitors.

GaPSC Education Specialist Paquita Morgan explained that “the terms of ERP members are for only two years, but because of Chamblee’s exceptional service and knowledge, we continued to reappoint him so as to retain his membership on the Panel.”

Shannon-Baker appointed to MMIRA Board of Directors

October 3, 2017

Peggy Shannon-Baker, Ph.D.

Peggy Shannon-Baker, Ph.D., assistant professor in the Department of Curriculum, Foundations and Reading, was appointed to the Mixed Methods International Research Association (MMIRA) Board of Directors. MMIRA aims to create an international community to promote interdisciplinary mixed methods research. The mission of the Association is to engage with the international community to support mixed methods research. Shannon-Baker will serve a one-year term.

Shannon-Baker is a new faculty member that joined the College of Education this fall. She earned a doctorate in educational studies from the University of Cincinnati where she also served as a faculty and staff member for eight years. Shannon-Baker also led several study abroad programs in k-8 schools in both Tanzania and Ecuador. Her research interests include critical international education, global multicultural education, teacher education, socio-cultural foundations of education, sociology of education, social justice education and philosophy of education.

COE alumnus commands Georgia Army National Guard

October 3, 2017

Col. Randall Simmons

The Georgia Army National Guard is made up of more than 11,000 citizen-soldiers who train in more than 79 hometown armories and regional facilities across the state. They not only respond to disturbances and natural disasters in Georgia — such as the recent Hurricane Irma — but they also fight alongside our nation's military on battlefields around the world.

And when the Guard deploys its soldiers to fields both international and domestic, it's a Georgia Southern University College of Education alumnus who now leads them.

On Sept. 15, Gov. Nathan Deal appointed Col. Randall Simmons ('95) to the position of Assistant Adjutant General-Army and Commander of the Georgia Army National Guard. In this role, he is responsible for making sure all Army Guard units are always ready, and always there when needed.

"I'm very humbled by the opportunity," said Simmons. "One thing the Georgia Guard takes a lot of pride in is that we are a national leader in readiness. We have never had to reject a mission because we didn't have the people, training, or equipment. It just speaks to the professionalism of the men and women that make up the Georgia Guard. It's an honor to serve with them."

A Statesboro native, Simmons says he spent most of his educational years at Georgia Southern, where his mother worked during his early elementary school years. He attended the University's Pre-K program, and then attended the Marvin Pittman Laboratory School for grades K-8. He only left Georgia Southern long enough to attend Statesboro High School for four years, and then returned for his undergraduate degree in secondary education.

"I have probably spent more time in school on campus at Georgia Southern than anybody else there," he said, laughing. "You add all that up, it's a lot of years of education at Georgia Southern."

Simmons didn't envision a military career after graduation. Instead, he pursued a career as a teacher and a coach — positions that left a lasting impact on him.

"I coached everything and had a great time," he said. "I certainly miss the school and the kids."

While also fulfilling his traditional guardsman duties, he served at Burke County Middle School and Southeast Bulloch High School before a military career opportunity came knocking.

"Once I joined the Guard, I realized it kind of filled a void after high school — being a member of a team," he said. "Most people that have experiences with high school athletics just like playing, like being part of a team, and being a part of something bigger than themselves."

"I quickly realized the Army Guard is a team of teams and has a lot of great people, and when I had the opportunity to become an active-duty member of the guard, it was something I just couldn't pass up."

During his military career, Simmons served tours in Iraq and Afghanistan as part of the 48th Infantry Brigade Combat Team, and was promoted to Brigade Commander in 2013. He has served as the Chief of Staff for the Georgia Army National Guard for the last three years.

He credits Georgia Southern with teaching him how to be a student and lifelong learner. At the University, he found engaged faculty who helped him gain confidence and achieve academic successes far beyond his college education. In addition to Officer Candidate School and many other military schools, Simmons attended the U.S. Army War College in Carlisle, Pennsylvania, where he earned a master's in strategic studies in 2013.

"One requirement I had at Officer Candidate School and throughout all of the courses I've had with the military is the ability to think critically," he said. "A lot of classes at Georgia Southern required that, and I'm thankful for the professors that probably didn't give me the grade I wanted on a paper because there wasn't enough critical thought put into them. That taught me a valuable lesson"

Simmons' ties to the University are still strong, and he works closely with Eagle Battalion, Georgia Southern's award-winning ROTC program. The Guard has installed two active-duty guardsmen to work with Eagle Battalion full-time, a deal that Simmons says benefits both parties.

"[Eagle Battalion has] won the MacArthur Award several times, and they do a great job," he said. "They are routinely the leading producer of lieutenants for the Georgia Army National Guard."

Whether visiting his family in Statesboro or visiting Paulson Stadium on game day, Simmons says he will always have a special connection to his alma mater. And in his new role, he hopes to represent his school, his hometown, his state and his country with Eagle Nation pride.

"It's very humbling, and I still have to pinch myself on a daily basis to make sure this is really happening," he said. "It's an awesome opportunity."

Share:

Posted in Alumni Highlights, Degree Programs

Tags: Col. Randall Simmons, Secondary Education